Fri 4/23	9-10 AM	FAC 221	Scott Gabriel	Advanced Biochemistry investigations to characterize crystalized proteins functions

				Students in Chem475 will present their semester's work to identify the function of two uncharacterized proteins. While these two proteins possess a crystal structure, they have no published biological function. Students will leverage their in silico analysis of the protein as well as data from the lab bench to propose the function of these uncharacterized proteins. All audiences and disciplines are welcome to join us and learn how scientists use computers to help model and predict how proteins work.
